These are called 'relative pronouns'. They can be used to add extra information to a sentence.

John, who is six, loves riding his dad's tractor.

This gives us more information about John.

It doesn't make sense on its own.

It is a type of subordinate clause called a relative clause.

It must begin with a relative pronoun.

Lesson 2

Add a relative clause to these sentences:

that where who when

whose

Peter stroked William Cat.

Peter returned the glue stick.

Then create your own sentences that include a relative clause.
