

Battle of the Glacier

By Connie Pipe

It seemed like a perfect autumn morning as Torston (the captain) was preparing the ship but a cold breeze blew past him and he felt he knew he had a tough day ahead.

Magnus was the first person to climb onto the Viking ship. There were ten boats in the fleet. Magnus was the leader of the Viking Warriors. He was an inspiring and brave fighter, who wore a dark bear skin cloak.

As the misty clouds rolled in the ships set sail from the rocky shore and Magnus and Torston thought of a plan to reclaim the land.

As they left a storm started brewing. It took two days to get to through the rough storms and battling seas. On the second day Torston and Magnus were preparing for the battle. It was a beautiful sunset and although it looked like nothing bad would happen, they could sense there was danger ahead.

As the Sunrise disappeared a terrifying storm came and shook the boats like crazy. One of the boats smashed into a massive rock. Magnus and Torston helped the crew to get off the ship but sadly not all of them made it.

As they got closer to the glacier it started to shake and the boats started to move more rapidly. The crew could hear a loud groaning sound coming from the glacier. Magnus looked up and could feel danger lurking.

As they stepped on to the glacier the angry God appeared as a fierce tornado, he shook the glacier so hard it began to quake.

As Torston was putting the anchors down he noticed the glacier was moving. "Magnus, I need to move the boats and you need to fight the angry God!" shouted Torston.

"Get everybody on board now!" replied Magnus.

Magnus ran directly towards the God and the God brought out his hammer. Magnus revealed his sword and he crushed the God's hammer, and with fury the God turned back into a tornado and push Magnus into a crevasse. Magnus let go of his sword and it fell onto the shore but the God did not notice it.

Torston looked up as he heard the screams of his best friend. He let out an almighty roar then told everyone to sail on.

"let's go."
