

Relative clauses

Western lowland gorillas, which are critically endangered, are mainly found in tropical rainforests in countries such as Cameroon and the DRC.

Spot the relative clause in the sentence above! (Did you also notice the use of the passive voice?!)

We use relative clauses to give extra information or detail – they can go at the end or in the middle of our sentences.

We use the relative pronouns: which, who, that, whose, whom, where...

Use the relative pronouns to add extra information to the sentences below about home learning. You decide where to put your relative clause.

Challenge: write some sentences of your own about your chosen animal or another subject of your choice.

Home learning is mostly done independently.

It helps if you have internet access.

If you cannot use a computer or tablet, you can have work printed out for you.

Whenever you get stuck, you can email your teacher.

Some people have been working with friends on Facetime.

